

The Fifth Grade Musers' Banquet

By Talia

The fifth graders at Seoul campus are learning about the Iditarod trail. To celebrate their Fantasy Iditarod Draft Race they are did an Iditarod tradition...The Musers' Banquet! The Musers' Banquet consists of figuring out your placement in the race and eating food!

Figuring out the placement in the Iditarod involves pulling numbers out of a mukluk, which is a traditional Alaskan boot. We didn't have a real mukluk so we used an UGG boot. After pulling out our numbers we picked our Iditarod dream team. Sadly not all the people got who they wanted. But after picking your musher we do the thing we have been waiting for.

We eat.

In the actual Iditarod they have food such as Steak, Mashed Potatoes, Baked Alaska and more! But of course who would spend all that money when you could just have McDonald's! To embrace the Iditarod feeling instead of eating from paper plates we ate from dog bowls and drank from bottles labeled toilet water! (Not actually toilet water). After we ate and cleaned up we started lucky draws which are when you pick a number and the judge (Ms.Wright) draws a number out of the boot we used to pick our numbers. The winners of the draws got adorable dog plushies.
